Around the Corner Croydon Creek

BY KATHRYN MCKAY

Washington parents love the National Zoo. They delight in a trip to the Museum of American History. They like to see the latest animated movie. After all, these places provide predictable pleasures that we might have enjoyed even before having children.

As parents, though, we often find unexpected delight in places that we might have overlooked or never known about unless we had a child. Nature centers tucked away in the suburbs are just those kinds of places.

Consider Croydon Creek Nature Center in Rockville, Md., which opened in 2002. Unlike many nature centers, which appear to be circa 1970 and are decorated in browns, Croydon Creek is cheerful and bright. But like its older counterparts, Croydon Creek captivates kids.

On the grounds of the Glenview Mansion at Rockville Civic Center Park, this facility is small enough so parents can easily keep track of youngsters in the two exhibit rooms and lobby, yet large enough to keep little ones amused for at least 30 minutes. A classroom with long rectangular tables and a rug painted with a pond and a bridge open up the imagination to games of Billy Goat Gruff.

In the lobby, the bright, colorful floor-to-ceiling mosaic on a curved wall captivates children. My 7-year-old nephew Brady calls the triangular-shaped mirrors in the mural "diamonds." He also likes the animal tracks that decorate the floor of the lobby and finding the fish, seashells and birds hidden in the mural.

Two activity rooms have windows overlooking a meadow and trees. These rooms combine displays of live animals and activities such as a telescope, life-size puzzles and snake skins that children can slip on their fingers. Dioramas are safe behind glass at kid level.

Watch the Eastern box turtle eat a slice of strawberry. Like a child, he isn't bothered that red juice dribbles down his chin. Listen to the little screech owl named Cosmo, whose hoot is so soft we must wait in silence to hear her as she peers at us with wide green eyes. She requires patience just as we strain to hear our own child's whispers. Tiny fish dart around plants in the aquarium. They look like they're playing hide-and-seek.

There are also exhibits that remind us of things we didn't think would cause so much discussion and interest. Take poop for ex-

240-314-8770

Hours: Tuesday – Saturday, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m., and Sundays, 1 to 5 p.m. Closed Mondays.

Admission: Free.

Programs: Activities are offered for children and adults. Programs for school children complement the Montgomery County Public School's science curriculum.

Directions: From 355, take Viers Mill Road South. Turn left on Route 28 East. Make a right onto Baltimore Road. Pass the entrance of Rockville Civic Center Park that leads to the Mansion. Turn left onto Avery Road. Follow signs to the Nature Center.

Ages: I recommend the Nature Center for children ages 8 and under, unless you're coming for a special event or activity, but older siblings may enjoy bird watching and nature hikes. Marked and unmarked trails wind through the forest and by the creek. Gifts: Like the "no candy" checkout stand at grocery stores, the Nature Notions Gift Shop is tucked away behind the front desk, so your kids probably won't notice it. But if you're looking for "green" gifts, the shop carries a small assortment of outdoor-oriented trinkets appropriate for children's birthday gifts. Proceeds help fund the Center's mission to promote and protect the natural world.

Adopt a Critter: You can take responsibility for feeding an animal. Fees range from $15 for a fish to $130 for a lion or water tortoise. In return, kids also get a certificate with a fact sheet and photograph of their adoptee.

ample. As parents, we wipe it and hope that we can contain it. We look forward to the day our children know where it belongs. At Croydon Creek, they display it. Scat is arranged by size and framed on the wall. From the tiny droppings of a bee to chunks left behind by a mountain lion, children can compare animal poop.

During my most recent visit to Croydon Creek, I observed a group of moms sitting around a table discussing home mortgages and preschools. If their children weren't gathered around them putting together puzzles, snuggling with stuffed animals and playing on computers, it would have looked like a scene from Starbucks, sans the lattes.

My sister and her children, ages 2 through 7, are frequent visitors to Croydon Creek. The admission price is right: free. The location is right: just a few miles from their home. They enjoy simple pleasures from Mother Nature regardless of the weather. Now if only my sister could order a cup of coffee!

CHAMPIONSHIP DRIVE

Some of the most prestigious golf events in the world will be played this year within a short drive of Washington, D.C.

Relaxed and Ready

RedGate Golf Course didn't always go down as smoothly as it does today. Opened in 1974, the Maryland municipal has had a history of rock buckets and time clocks, hard-nosed starters and tired bunkers.

But times have changed at RedGate, which is the only golf facility owned and operated by the City of Rockville. With a few major upgrades in recent years and a relaxation of some of the rules, it is now one of the more popular munis around.

"It's a nice story," says assistant golf pro John Allard. "We are still somewhat regimented, but we have found ways to be as laid back as we can."

Little known architect Therman Donovan gave the hilly, traditional course its character. While some of his vision, along with the buckets that players used to clear rocks from the fairway, have been eradicated with time, the routing has endured.

"Things have changed here dramatically in the last three years since we've taken over," says Kieron Mooney, head pro and general manager. "We have new programs, frequent player cards, discount programs for both city and non-city players as well as juniors and seniors. We are involved with the First Tee program and we have the most extensive tournament program for a public fee course."

RedGate runs more than 35 tournaments each year and the RedGate Player's Club has more than 250 members.

"We have a loyal following," says Allard. "On any given weekend morning we'll have a group of 40 or 50 players in which we know most of them by their first names. It's a nice atmosphere for them."

RedGate's fully automated reservation system allows players to make tee times up to 14 days in advance. The Web site has earned national recognition for its presentation.

But RedGate's success isn't just about all the periphery stuff it provides its clients. The golf course is a lot of fun to play, especially in the wake of some upgrades.

"We now have one of the nicer golf courses in the county," says Allard. "In 1999 we had a new irrigation system put in so now we can water nearly all of the golf course. We also completed a bunker renovation in 2003 since the original ones had gotten compacted or were strategically outdated."

To polish off the "new" RedGate, the city has decided to start a renovation project this fall on all of its creeks and ponds, including the addition of a pond on the rather forgiving No. 11. The most noticeable upgrade will be an extended driving range where players will be able to practice with all their clubs, not just their irons.

The course plays to a modest 6,458 yards, which doesn't account for all the uphill shots. It has matured into a challenging, tree-lined test that requires skill and strategy on every hole. It's in the middle of everything but still rather secluded in the heart of Montgomery County. *

LINKAGES TO LEARNING

Dear Mr. Dronenberg:

Lew:

On behalf of Linkages to Learning and the children and families we serve, I want to thank you so much for your assistance in making our program at the beautiful Glenview Mansion so successful. As one of Linkages partners and providers, the City of Rockville's in-kind contribution of space provides a magnificent venue for our annual Mothers Empowerment Tea. Your partnership greatly maximizes Linkages ability to direct 100% of the proceeds raised at the event to strengthen services to support our at-risk parents' ability to support and raise healthy children.

As you know, Linkages to Learning provides collaborative school-based health, mental health and social services to thousands of at-risk children and their family members in Montgomery County elementary and middle schools each year, including Maryvale ES. Our culturally appropriate services address barriers to learning and encourage healthy development of children and families. Prevention programming reaches families who lack knowledge of resources and options to address problems that profoundly affect their children and families.

Special thanks to custodians Harold and Gary for their hands-on advice and assistance during the event, even moving some things around as we prepared and helping us as we wrapped things up afterwards. I hope you will share our appreciation with them, as they were both truly delightful to work with and provided excellent customer service.

Once again this year, many guests commented on your fabulously gorgeous facility, as well as on how breath-taking the flowering plants were that seemingly blossom just for us! As our keynote speaker, A'Lelia Perry Bundles, is the great-great-grand-daughter of a slave-turned millionaire (as well as her biographer), it seemed especially fitting that Tea was held at the Bowie family's former plantation. This rich history underscored just how much progress our community has made!

As promised, the City of Rockville's logo was prominently recognized at our Mothers Empowerment Tea through the event program and displays, and we were delighted to recognize Councilmembers Bob Dorsey and Susan Hoffman as our special guests and sponsors. Again, we thank you for supporting our program, and for your help in advancing our goal of building healthier families and communities.

Yours truly,

Sharon Strauss

On behalf of the City of Rockville's Recreation and Parks Department, please extend our thanks to the Burgundy Estates Civic Association for the cleanup on the grounds of Rockville Civic Center Park this past weekend.

It is obvious, by the 20-plus bags of debris and other items I picked up today, that your group worked very hard. We appreciate your group taking time to make our park a better place for all residents.
